PROJECTS

Banking System Simulation

This project is a secure, cross-platform C++ Banking Application designed to simulate real-world financial transactions such as creating accounts, depositing or withdrawing funds, and transferring money between accounts safely. I built a custom InputFilter engine that reads inputs line-by-line using `std::getline` and try-catch blocks, to stop the application from skipping questions or crashing when the user types in 'junk' text that is not accepted i.e. '965abc'. It also saves all your account information directly into a binary database file on your computer, meaning your "bank records" from previous runs, as long as you have exited the application safely, will load up every time you start up and login to the app.

Technologies: C++, Visual Studio, Git, GitHub
